Rural landscapes, rural places and communities, rural events, rural myths and stories and more, have played a seminal role in defining who we are as individuals, as communities and as a nation.

With projected increases in world population and ‘at home’ through to 2050 and the demands this will place on life and lifestyle essentials including food, water and energy, it is critical that the decline and marginalisation of rural Australia is turned around.

How can we as a nation prepare and engage optimistically with and about the future? Education is central to answering this question.
